

Did you ever know that you are my hero?

Calling all artists, writers, thinkers, and employees!

Walt Disney Corporation is asking its marketing and sales department, as well as its film department, to create a new hero. Due to the current economic recession, profits are low this quarter. The company hopes to produce a cartoon and sell merchandise to promote sales. Your job, as well as an employee of Disney, is to design a new hero. If your design proposal is chosen, you will receive a promotion! Just about everyone in the company is applying, so competition is tough!

Assignment: Create either a mythic hero or a folktale hero. Include a detailed, professional illustration of what the hero looks like. Be creative and original! Avoid basing your hero on those that already exist. Besides including the artistic picture, a profile must be included that explains:

- A. The background or childhood of the hero (minimum of seven sentences)
- B. His or her name(s), and a motto
- C. The power or heroic quality he or she possesses (minimum of three sentences)
- D. Any sidekick or helper he or she has (or an arch nemesis)
- E. What challenges he or she faces on his or her quest (minimum of five sentences)
- F. What is the goal of the quest (minimum of five sentences)
- G. Any flaws the hero may have
- H. Anything else you can think of!

*The profile should be written as an outline:

EXAMPLE:

Powers: Kaptain Katie can see through walls with her handy dandy extra thick super specs. These super specs also enable her to see into the future and predict what will happen next! She knows the enemies next move before he does!

Challenges:

Sidekick:

Since you are submitting this project to your boss, make sure it is professional. Although it is outline form, complete sentences, appropriate grammar, no second person pronouns (You), and correct spelling are expected.

Be sure to include:

- 1 example of a hyperbole
- 1 example of a simile
- 1 example of imagery
